PRESS RELEASE

For Immediate Release:

STRESSED in SCOTTSDALE, award-winning author Marcia Fine's satire about the manic lives so many are living has been released to rave reviews. The third in her Jean Rubin series, it addresses serious issues such as the environment, political corruption, mammograms, IVF and jobless kids, all with a biting sense-of-humor. And who doesn't need a little fun poked in this dead serious world? Stress and its effects on us are making headlines across America. Why not examine it in a manner that brings to the forefront the mental, emotional and physical effects of living stressed-out in an ever-changing, escalating world?

With the publishing industry in flux and people searching for books other places than in traditional book stores, this novel embraces new technology for marketing. Check out Marcia blogging as her character, commenting about the environs of a posh resort town with a host of chic residents and the bizarre news that entertains us all.
